

Professor Rachel Godsil

Rachel Godsil is the Eleanor Bontecou Professor of Law at Seton Hall Law School. Her teaching and research interests include applied social science, constitutional law, property, education and race. Her recent work focuses on implicit bias, stereotype threat, and interventions that can ameliorate the behavioral effects of implicit cognition. Godsil is a co-founder and research director for the American Values Institute, a national consortium of social scientists and law professors focusing on the role of implicit bias in law and policy. She is co-author of Implicit Bias in the Courtroom published in the UCLA Law Review as well as Implicit Bias in Environmental Decision making a chapter in Implicit Bias across the Law (Cambridge University Press, 2012). Godsil has written amicus briefs to the Supreme Court on behalf of research psychologists in the Fisher v. University of Texas - Austin and on behalf of the National Parent Teacher Association in the Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District litigation at the Supreme Court. She has written numerous articles and book chapters on issues of race.