IV. COLLATERAL CONSEQUENCES FOR YOUTH

Young people who become involved in the justice system face a daunting array of counterproductive debilitating barriers that make it much more difficult for them to succeed in many important aspects of life. These "Collateral Consequences" are over and above the direct penalties of their underlying actions. They are the unintended consequences that flow from their involvement in the justice system. These children's growth and expected development into mature adults is disrupted and skewed. Their childhood is interrupted and thrown off course. This panel will discuss the difficulties and barriers these young people face and will offer recommendations and possible solutions to these vexing questions.

COMMUNITY COURT VISITS*

Red Hook Community Justice Center, a multi-jurisdictional community court in an isolated Brooklyn neighborhood, brings criminal, family, and housing cases before a single judge and provides on-site social services to help solve neighborhood problems. The Justice Center hosts a range of youth-focused programs including a youth court, where teenagers are trained to serve as judge and jury, hearing cases referred by the police, judges and schools, and helping to set standards of acceptable behavior for their peers. In a 2004 survey, 78 percent of the neighborhood's residents viewed the community court favorably; and more than 94 percent of interviewed criminal defendants recently surveyed indicated that they felt that they had been treated fairly by the court. In 2005, the Justice Center was the subject of a nationally televised PBS documentary, Red Hook Justice.

Integrated Domestic Violence Court, is designed to improve the court and criminal justice response to domestic violence for victims and their children. New York City's "IDV" court brings each family's overlapping civil, criminal and matrimonial cases before a single judge allowing for dramatically improved judicial decision-making and true defendant accountability. Children exposed to domestic violence are represented by their own lawyers to ensure that the resulting dispositions reflect their needs and ensure that they do not fall through the cracks. Throughout New York State, IDV courts have reduced the number of trips that victims have had to make to court and, in some locations, documented increases in criminal domestic violence convictions. Over the past four years, New York State's IDV courts have served almost 9,000 families and adjudicated over 43,000 cases, including over 10,000 custody/visitation requests.

Midtown Community Court, the first community court in the United States, was founded in 1993. The court combines punishment and help, holding quality-of-life offenders accountable, by sentencing them to community service, and helping them avoid re-offending, by linking them to social services. Compliance with sanctions at the Midtown Community Court is 50 percent higher than compliance at traditional courts, and an independent evaluation found reductions in offending patterns and increased public confidence in justice. In addition to on-site counseling, Midtown offers GED classes, homeless outreach and adult and adolescent job training programs. The Midtown Community Court has become the model for more than thirty community courts across the country and a growing number internationally, including in the United Kingdom, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Canada.

Drug Court/ Brooklyn Treatment Court was the first drug court in New York City. The court's efforts to link felony drug offenders to substance abuse treatment have led to significant reductions in recidivism. To target younger offenders, in 2003, the Brooklyn Treatment Court added a marijuana addiction program. By 2006, 196 drug courts were in operation or planning around the state, built in part on the Brooklyn model.

Harlem Community Justice Center, applies the community court model to family and housing court matters while offering a range of programs for young people at risk of offending. In addition to juvenile delinquency matters and landlord-tenant disputes, the Harlem Community Justice Center has an adult and a juvenile re-entry court and a youth court.

II. INNOVATIVE ELEMENTARY AND HIGH SCHOOL PROGRAMS FOCUSING ON GANGS, THE LAW, THE COURTS, AND THE COMMUNITY

This panel highlights innovative educational and community programs that offer alternatives to our youth. The innovative programs discussed will include programs that focus on rescuing youth from gangs and other negative peer influences; teaching the kids personal and mediation skills to deter them from engaging in violence in the schools and communities; building self-worth; and offering career alternatives in the law. Three such programs will be discussed in detail, and the Deputy Mayor of the City of New York will provide an overview of other innovative educational programs offered in New York City.

III. DISPROPORTIONATE NUMBER OF MINORITY YOUTH IN THE FAMILY AND CRIMINAL COURT SYSTEMS

African American and other ethnic children are more likely to be under State supervision, and once there, they generally fare worse than other children. Even though there is no evidence that they are abused or neglected more than other children, children of color are more likely to be pulled into the child protection system, and to be placed in out-of-home care. For too many children there is a "slippery slope" leading from children's protective services to juvenile detention-even prison. This panel will offer solutions on how to make a much needed difference for our youth.
