In addition, she created the Adoption Now program that produced more effective procedures for children in foster care and their families. Before her appointment to the bench, she practiced law at Sullivan & Cromwell, IBM and Olwine, Connelly, Chase, O'Donnell & Weyher, where she became that firm's first female partner. She is a 1958 graduate of Barnard College, a 1962 graduate of New York University School of Law (cum laude), and holds 30 honorary degrees from law schools, colleges and universities.

She is the author of well over 200 published articles on legal process, state constitutional law, women in law, juvenile justice, professional ethics and problem-solving courts.
